Scientists Control Air Flight of V-2 Rocket

WHITE SANDS, N. M.—The army announced that American scientists succeeded in controlling the flight path of a German V-2 rocket at the White Sands proving grounds.

Maj. J. B. Dickey, public relations officer, said the V-2 was kept under control by means of an electronic guidance system developed by a contractor for the army's ordnance department.

He reported that the rocket was maneuvered successfully in movement from right to left and up and down during its flight It reachr an altitude of about 70 miles.

Other officers at the proving grounds pointed out that a "beam guidance control" was used in early stages of V-2 tests but it merely maintained a desired flight path and did not maneuver the V-2.

During the war the Germans were able to have the V-2 rockets follow a predetermined course but could not control the missile in flight.

87, But Still Can Lick His Weight in Wildcats

EUGENE, ORE. — Although he's 87, Lafe Boring proved that he still can lick his weight in wildcats—with a wooden cane.

Boring came upon a wildcat which was caught in a trap. The snarling animal broke free and viciously lunged at the elderly man whom he blamed for his troubles.

With the only weapon he had in his possession, a wooden cane, Boring pummeled the attacking wildcat and killed the beast. In the future angry wildcats will give Boring a wide berth.

Fuel Shortage Halts 62-Year-Old Vigil

Dead Man Fails to Return Home As He Promised

CUTTINGSVILLE, VT. — The increased cost of fuel forced the closing of the sprawling estate of jovial old John P. Bowman, who in 1886 directed that the house be maintained in waiting readiness for him after his death.

For 62 years people have been waiting for Bowman to come stomping out of the foothills, icicles on his majestic mustache, his velvet coattails whipped by the winter wind, his rusty beaver hat cocked jauntily over one jolly eye. But since he died he has never reappeared.

Most faithful to the strange will has been 80-year-old George N. Jones, the home's custodian, who was quartered in the stately old house. Daily he wound clocks, dusted furniture, hung crisp, white curtains in the windows and tossed crackling logs in the fireplaces. He kept the huge rooms brightly lighted each night. At dusk every day, he prepared a hot meal.

"The food's always been ready on time," Jones said, "but so far my wife and I have had to eat it ourselves."

After amassing a fortune in the leather business at Stony Creek, N Y., Bowman retired to the large gabled house. Within three months after moving into the home his wife and two daughters died as the result of a contagious disease. Some said the tragedy warped his mind.

Five years later he summoned his servants and told them sternly: "I'll soon be leaving but I'll be back. I promise I'll come back some winter day and I have never broken my word." One hour later he was dead.

His will left $50,000 in a trust fund to pay the upkeep of the house "pending my return."

"I'm not among those who think he'll return," said Caretaker Jones, "but if he actually walked in some night I wouldn't wait to see if he were a happy ghost. I may be getting on in years, but I'd make California before I slowed down enough to tell anybody what had happened."

Cops Return Escaped Nags To Glue Factory for Fate

DES MOINES, IOWA.—Policemen here participated in an impromptu roundup after 24 horses rebelled against their fate as contents for a glue-pot and broke out of a glue factory corral.

An excited newspaper carrier salesmen telephoned police that two dozen wild horses were running east on Grand avenue. In response to the call a police crew soon trapped ten of the horses at one spot, got four more in a schoolyard and then began rounding up stragglers in ones and twos.

The freedom - seeking horses were taken back to the factory.
